WE EVOLVE WITH TIME!

Bayo Lawal was born on 13th October, 1993, to the loving family of Mr Olatunji and Mrs Oluwabunmi Lawal. He grew up in a village called Killa, located in the Odeda Local Government Area of Ogun State, Nigeria. Despite facing multiple school transfers due to his parents' instability, Bayo persevered and eventually enrolled and successfully completed his primary education at Solid Achievers, Olodo. He spent much of his childhood with his grandmother and other grandchildren. It was a fun time, filled with farming, harvesting, and selling cassava. Bayo learned firsthand how to process cassava into popular West African dishes such as Elubo Lafun, Garri, Fufu, and Starch. After primary school, Bayo took the common entrance exam at Baptist Boys High School (BBHS) in Oke-Saje, Abeokuta.

It was the same school attended by many notable Nigerians, including former CJN Bola Ajibola, former President Olusegun Obasanjo, and former Governor Gbenga Daniels. The school, now over 100 years old, provided Bayo with a solid educational foundation that he has built on throughout his life. Throughout his time at BBHS, Bayo was a leader. He served as the chapel prefect, one of the fellowship leaders, and part of the Literary and Debating society.

From Laptop Repairs to University Education...

After completing his secondary education, Bayo moved to Lagos to stay with his mother and start building his career. He decided to learn how to repair laptops at Olugbede Market, Egbeda, popularly known as the GSM village. He learned from Michael, and through his hard work and dedication, he became proficient in laptop repairs. Despite facing challenges in his academic pursuits, Bayo remained determined to succeed. He wrote the Joint Admissions and Matriculation Board (JAMB) exam twice before gaining admission into the university. In 2012, he enrolled in the Interim Joint Matriculation Board (IJMB) program at a center in Kwara State. This A-level program from Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria, gave him the opportunity to further his education and improve his chances of gaining admission to a university. After completing the program, he wrote the JAMB exam again and gained admission to study Political Science at Kwara State University (KWASU).

Bayo made a name for himself at KWASU thanks to his outstanding public speaking skills. He was known for his proficiency in presentations and was involved in many extracurricular activities, including being the Vice President of his fellowship for two years and serving as the Social Director in his department for a year.

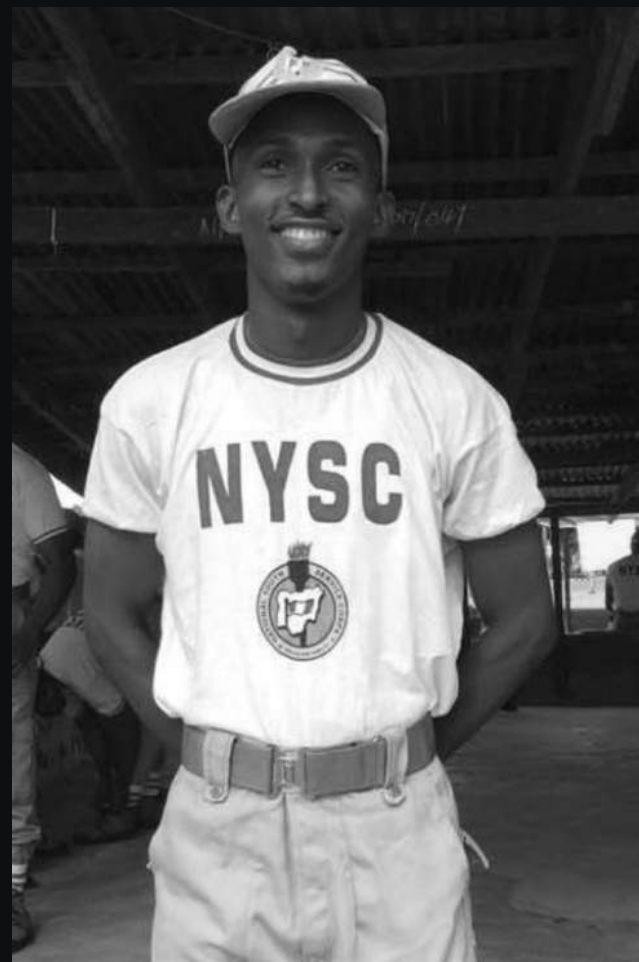

During his time at KWASU, Bayo created the largest platform in the university, the Enlightenment Platform. This motivational and inspirational platform invited guest speakers to share their knowledge and experience with students.
